Whether or not art can always be associated with aesthetic appreciation is a question philosophers have asked for centuries. ---- Art can be educational, as with an illustration that details the bones in the human skeleton. It can be representative, as with a play that tells the life of two characters in history. It can motivate, as with a speech that inspires listeners to action. Art can also enrich people's lives in the way that a sculpture adorns a room or music inspires a mood.

- A) While some people share reactions to certain objects of art, the aesthetic properties are subject to individual interpretation.
- B) Aesthetic properties often have the power to inspire emotional response, and such a response is not likely to be consistent.
- C) Works of art are identified as aesthetically pleasing because they affect sentiments.
- D) However, the beauty and aesthetic properties found in art serve many purposes.
- E) Aesthetic appreciation, then, is the admiration of beauty, such as valuing the fine arts of music and literature.

The Romans were the greatest bridge builders of the ancient world, just as they were the greatest road builders. In the city of Rome, at least 12 bridges crossed the Tiber River. ---- Some of these were temporary wooden bridges. Others were pontoon bridges, or floating bridges, of boats placed side by side. On secondary roads, the Romans built wooden bridges, but for their major roads, they constructed sturdy stone bridges. None of the Roman wooden bridges survives today, but some of the stone bridges are still intact. One of the best preserved stone bridges in Italy is the Ponte di Augusto, completed in AD 20 at Rimini.

- A) Bridges consisting of stone piers were able to withstand the forces of nature longer than the ones with wooden piers.
- B) To span the largest rivers like the Danube, Roman bridge builders used a combination of stone and wood.
- C) Elsewhere, engineers travelled with the Roman armies to build all kinds of bridges for soldiers to cross the rivers they encountered.
- D) In western Spain near Merida, a bridge built by the Romans in AD 106 still carries traffic over the Tagus River.
- E) Stone bridges were laid on rivers with arches of large, overlapping stones through which the water could flow.

The dynastic age of ancient Egypt lasted for an astonishingly long period of just over 3,000 years. The height of ancient Egypt's powers was during the lengthy reign of Rameses II. There are abundant archaeological and textual evidence to gain a rich understanding of life spread along the Nile at this time. --- That is partly because many communities of those lands were non-literate nomads who travelled great distances with their herds (especially sheep and goat) looking for grass. They left few archaeological traces behind.

- A) Under Rameses II's son Merneptah, large numbers of different Libyan groups managed to invade the Nile delta, but they were defeated by the Egyptian army.
- B) Along the Mediterranean coast, there were permanent settlements in areas including eastern Libya, where seasonal rainfall allowed limited agriculture and the raising of cattle.
- C) During the reign of Rameses II, Egypt faced several attempted invasions by coastal-based populations from the west, especially the peoples they referred to as 'Libu'.
- D) However, there are far less evidence for life in North Africa to the west of Egypt, which covered modern Libya, Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco.
- E) In the second Battle of Kadesh, Ramses II was almost captured but was rescued by the sudden arrival of troops from Amurru, the land of the Amorites, former Hittite subjects who had defected to Egypt.

To an outsider it may seem that the term 'Aboriginal' serves as a name for a single population, a disparate but ultimately homogeneous people. --- While the majority of Indigenous Australians lived in coastal areas, others occupied islands off the mainland, including the Tiwi Islands to the north and Tasmania in the south. Others remained closer to New Guinea, settling on the Torres Strait Islands above the northern tip of Queensland. Although they are classified as Aboriginals, the Torres Strait Islanders are of Melanesian descent and share many traits and customs with the people of what is today Papua New Guinea.

- A) In fact, people are confused by the term, many taking it to mean something along the lines of 'not the original ones', which is rather misleading.
- B) However, historians and anthropologists are yet to agree exactly when these peoples originated.
- C) Yet, in truth there are hundreds of different clans each equipped with their own tongues and belief systems and scattered across the continent.
- D) Furthermore, one people of the Australian continent would have shared cultural similarities with that of another.
- E) Hence, the Native Americans of the United States and the Aboriginals of Australia suffered a similar fate.

(I) Emotional intelligence, which refers to the ability to perceive and constructively act on both one's own emotions and the feelings of others, has found a number of different applications outside of psychological research. (II) Professional, educational, and community institutions have integrated different aspects of the emotional intelligence philosophy into their organisations. (III) The popularity of the concept of emotional intelligence in business is easily explained – when employees, managers, and clients have mutually rewarding personal relationships, productivity increases and profits follow. (IV) In addition to emotional intelligence, factors such as self-confidence and self-discovery can greatly contribute to employees' competence. (V) On the other hand, emphasis on emotional intelligence at schools focuses on conflict resolution and communication skills, and is frequently implemented in violence-prevention programs.

(I) The term 'oldest old' refers to persons at the upper segment of the age pyramid. (II) By a conventional demographic definition those aged 80 years and older are included in the oldest-old population, although alternative definitions are also in use. (III) Since the end of World War II, in most countries the oldest old has been the fastest growing component of the population at large. (IV) Increases in life expectancy are welcomed as a sign of progress and improvement in living conditions. (V) This trend will almost certainly continue in the decades to come, with improving survival rates at very high ages.

(I) The Ancient Greeks believed that writing played an important part in the development of civilisation. (II) The Greeks used an alphabet, a set of symbols or letters representing various sounds, in their system of writing. (III) They associated the use of written language with order and democracy. (IV) Sometime around 600 BCE, for example, the Athenian politician Solon had his new laws written on a large wooden tablet and placed on display so all could see them. (V) This permanent posting of the laws made it clear that they were fixed and that they applied to everyone.

(I) The Yeşilırmak, a river in Türkiye, has a course of approximately 418 kilometres. (II) The area of its basin is around 20,000 square kilometres. (III) It was once part of Pontus, a kingdom bordering the Black Sea, which flourished from the 4th century BCE until it became part of the Roman Empire. (IV) The river rises in the mountains of northeast Türkiye, flows northwest through narrow fertile valleys, and ends in the Black Sea, near the city of Samsun. (V) The river's highest flow is from March to July, as snow melts in the mountains of Türkiye, and its lowest flow is in November and December.

(I) The term 'imaginary audience' was introduced by the psychologist David Elkind. (II) The concept refers to the tendency of adolescents to falsely assume that their appearance or behaviour is the focus of other people's attention. (III) Having an imaginary audience is believed to result in the self-consciousness that is characteristic of adolescence and is often linked conceptually with personal fable, which involves having a strong belief in one's own uniqueness. (IV) Researchers can assess imaginary audience by asking adolescents questions about what they would do in social situations that are potentially embarrassing. (V) Some researchers have rated children with imaginary playmates as less competent in cognitive, physical, and social skills than their peers.

(I) People automatically react to the facial expressions of others by mirroring them – such as when the person next to you yawns – but it is also true for much more discreet motions. (II) Even when a person's face does not seem to react to seeing another individual's facial expression, scientists can measure that their facial muscles still mirror the expression they are looking at. (III) If a person's face is paralysed or he/she has had Botox injections, partly paralysing face muscles, it might be difficult for him/her to decode the emotions of other people. (IV) According to some scientists, this mirroring helps people understand other people's emotions. (V) This is because when people mirror an expression, it triggers the emotion that the expression represents, and so they experience empathy.

Like many other words in psychology, adaptation has multiple meanings. At the basis of all the meanings, however, is the concept carried by its Latin root, adaptare: to fit. Among ethologists, each physical and behavioural characteristic of a species is the product of and contributes to its adaptive radiation, the multiplication of individuals that can survive in the changing environment, and the diversification of the species in a diverse environment. Such adaptation is genetically based and requires numerous generations to be accomplished. In contrast to this genetic adaptation are phenotypic adaptations, which occur within the lifespan of an individual. The results of these adaptations are not transmitted to the offspring, although the capacity for such adaptation is. Implicit in the concept is the alteration of an individual by the presence of a persistent, non-toxic or non-traumatic, non-fatiguing stimulus, or by the prolonged termination and absence of a customary, persistent stimulus, such as weightlessness. Examples of such adaptation include the gradual diminution in the coldness of water after we immerse our hand in it; the reduction in loudness of a tone after a few seconds; and the return of sight (though colourless) after a period in a darkened room, and the return of comfortable colour vision after exposure to a brightly lighted environment.

According to the passage, the word adaptation ----.

- A) is rooted in the Latin language unlike other words in psychology
- B) is a word that is used to explain changing concepts in psychology
- C) involves the ability of individuals, rather than groups, to physically fit in their environments
- D) has more than one meaning, although they all reflect the same etymological origin
- E) differs in use from many other psychological terms to a great extent

67

It is clearly stated in the passage that phenotypic adaptation ----.

- A) occurs only after a genetic adaptation or behaviour change
- B) is observed in the following generation as well as in the individual going through adaptation
- C) differs from genetic adaptation in some aspects, such as the length of time involved in the adaptation process
- D) requires the absence of a previously-existing stimulus to come into effect as a prerequisite
- E) occurs more frequently in species that are more sensitive to their immediate environment

68

Which of the following is not given as an example of phenotypic adaptation?

- A) Shivering when exposed to prolonged duration of coldness
- B) Feeling a change in the water temperature when it contacts a body part
- C) Getting used to a high volume of sound after a short time
- D) Regaining colourful sight after a time of exposure to a brightened environment
- E) Gaining sight in darkness again after spending some time in that environment

Action film is one that revels excessively in scenes of action like car chases, gun fights, violence and bloodshed. For over fifty years in Chinese film history, the action film was never a popular genre, partly because of an entrenched Chinese preference for theatricality and narrative plot, and partly because of a persistent emphasis on the moral function of entertainment throughout most of the 20th century. If one really insists on a typically Chinese type of action in the early period, then martial arts film may perhaps qualify as a sibling of the action film in the West. However, even that qualification begs the question, for in the majority of Chinese martial arts films up to the 1970s, the triumph of moral integrity is usually given priority over the mere spectacle of kung fu fights. In the minds of Western viewers, Chinese action films may be closely associated with, or even largely equivalent to, gangster films from Hong Kong. This association is correct as far as one has in mind the dominant influence the Hong Kong genre has had on the markets of both Taiwan and mainland China since the 1980s.

69

Which of the following was the reason for action films not succeeding in China at first?

- A) The dominance of martial arts films in Chinese cinemas
- B) The insufficient number of cinemas and necessary equipment
- C) The censorship imposed upon the Chinese cinema
- D) The traditional inclination to theatre and ethical meaning attributed to entertainment
- E) Their encouraging nature for violence and bloodshed

70

Which of the following is mentioned in relation to martial arts films in China?

- A) They were originally produced in Hong Kong and Taiwan.
- B) The definition of moral integrity is similar to that of Western films.
- C) Morality generally gains more importance than the display of fighting scenes.
- D) There are more martial arts films in Hong Kong than in China.
- E) Western and Chinese characters fought in the same manner.

71

Which could be the best title for the passage?

- A) Action Films in the Far East
- B) Chinese Version of Action Films
- C) Challenges of Producing Action Films
- D) Chinese Films Imitating Western Violence
- E) The Inspiration of Chinese Films: Hong Kong Films

Many Americans think English is the official language of the United States. It is not. In fact, the US does not have an official language – and has never had one. Some states have official languages: Spanish in New Mexico and English and Hawaiian in Hawaii, but not the nation as a whole. Some Americans also tend to think of the US as essentially a monolingual nation, albeit with large numbers of Spanish speakers in the Southwest, Southeast, and Northeast. Actually, nearly 47 million US residents over the age of 5 speak a home language other than English. 28 million of those speak Spanish, and more than half of these Spanish-speakers report that they also speak English very well. Youngsters between the ages of 5 and 17 who speak a home language other than English number close to 10 million, and the vast majority are reported to speak English very well. In seven heavily populated states, at least one of every four residents over the age of 5 speaks a home language other than English. All 50 states have speakers of Arabic, Hindi, Hungarian, Korean, Tagalog, Thai, Urdu, and Vietnamese. All 50 states also have native American speakers of indigenous North American languages.

72

According to the passage, one big misconception about the US that many of the citizens share ----.

- A) is that they consider the country a multilingual one
- B) involves the official language of the country, which does not exist
- C) has to do with the number of states where English is the official language
- D) comes from the linguistic data about the minorities in the country
- E) pertains to the number of youngsters speaking English

73

It can be inferred from the passage that, in the US, ----.

- A) Arabic, Hindi, Korean, Thai, and Vietnamese are spoken as the official language in certain states
- B) due to the diverse structure of the society a great number of people speak more than one language
- C) Spanish speakers would rather speak their home language despite being fluent in English
- D) the official language is assigned regardless of the majority of people living there
- E) indigenous North American languages have become extinct due to the prevalence of other languages

74

What could be the best title for this passage?

- A) The Competition among Minority Languages in the US
- B) Official Languages in the US from Spanish to Hawaiian
- C) Language Preferences of the Youth in the US
- D) The Endangered Languages of the US
- E) Linguistic Repertoire of the US

The 'unsinkable' Titanic was suddenly sunk as it collided with an iceberg on its first transatlantic voyage. It weighed more than 46,000 tons, stood eleven stories high and four city blocks long, and carried 20 lifeboats. This was four more lifeboats than the Board of Trade regulations required. The Titanic's reputation of being unsinkable created an atmosphere of complacency and arrogant indifference, from the captain to the lowest deck hand. So widespread was this outlook that when the call to abandon ship was made a large number of passengers refused to believe what they were told. There was a casual approach to safety. No formal boat drill – a procedure to ensure orderly behaviour in an emergency – was arranged for passengers. There were lifeboats for only one-third of the passengers, legally correct but hardly responsible. Radio was used by passengers to send messages to friends, describing life aboard the Titanic. The ship's radio operator was so heavily engaged in sending these messages that he paid little attention to the warning signals about icebergs from other ships. Even a sudden drop in the outside air temperature around the ship, a clear indication of proximity to an iceberg, was ignored by the ship operator. Messages kept arriving from other ships warning of the presence of icebergs but the Titanic's captain seemed indifferent to them and instead of slowing down, he maintained a speed of about 25 mph, a high speed for ships at that time.

75

The Titanic's reputation of being unsinkable ---.

- A) was established due to its magnitude and capacity of load
- B) raised questions among the passengers about the adequacy of safety measures
- C) caused some laxation in the application of some procedures necessary for emergency situations
- D) was justified by its compliance with the Board of Trade regulations
- E) boosted a perfectionist view among the crew that everything must be handled with care

76

Which of the following is not true about the ship crew?

- A) The ship's radio operator remained uninterested in the passengers' idea of informing people about the danger.
- B) The ship operator disregarded the drastic temperature drop in the outside weather.
- C) The captain did not take the messages from other ships about the perilous iceberg seriously.
- D) The captain kept the ship's pace relatively high even after the warnings coming from other ships.
- E) The crew did not behave responsibly in supplying the equipment necessary for evacuation.

77

What is the main purpose of the passage?

- A) To list the safety precautions that are necessary for ship travel
- B) To define the significance of Titanic in the history of ship collisions
- C) To highlight the importance of the Board of Trade regulations
- D) To explain a series of failures that brought on the sinking of Titanic
- E) To clarify why the Titanic was renowned as unsinkable

Aristotle conceived of humans as naturally social and political by virtue of two human faculties: reasoned speech and moral choice. These traits of reason, speech, and ethics are innate in humanity but require cultivation and education to become fully developed. Aristotle takes a teleological approach to reality that looks at everything in terms of its development to completion. A frequent example of this is an acorn, whose potential is a fully grown, healthy oak tree. But that full development, while inside the acorn, requires specific environmental encouragement – the best soil, rain, sunlight, surrounding plants, and so on – and most acorns do not reach their full potential or 'perfection'. Therefore, Aristotelian teleology looks at the ultimate end or goal or purpose of a thing when judging its excellence. Humans are potentially the greatest creatures, but without 'law and morals' they can fall below the beasts in depravity and cruelty. It is everyone's concern to have each person in the society receive an education and moral cultivation, or the whole country will suffer.

According to the passage, teleology focuses on ----.

- A) reasoning and ethics in societies
- B) comparative studies of various species
- C) the end product not the process
- D) the societal concerns people have
- E) the innateness of traits specific to humans

79

What can be concluded from the passage?

- A) Morals have a more important role than laws in the perfection of a society.
- B) People should have common sense about the education and the moral development of the society as a whole.
- C) Being part of a community is a unique feature of humans.
- D) The most important factor for people to reach full development is their innate capacity.
- E) It is possible to educate every single person in society to reach perfection.

80

What is the main purpose of the author?

- A) To inform the reader about the Aristotelian approach to human development
- B) To analyse the significance of education and moral cultivation for the society
- C) To describe the reasons why Aristotle adopted a teleological approach to reality
- D) To argue that societies can only improve by implementing teleology
- E) To persuade the readers to employ a teleological approach to judgement
