Rachel:

- I've always thought that fish is one of the most silent animal species in the world. But today, I found out that some fish species can be quite noisy.

Jason:

- How so?

Rachel:

- I read in an article that a fish type, called Gulf corvina, may make one of the loudest naturally produced sounds in the ocean.

Jason:

Rachel:

- If you think so, get ready to be shocked. The researchers have found that an individual Gulf corvina's sound for scaring its enemies is louder than standing next to the stage at a rock concert.

A I don't find the news that fish can make sounds surprising since there's so much evidence showing that whales can sing.

B Then, I wouldn't be surprised if I discover that these poor animals are heavily exploited because of this amazing feature.

C If that's the case, I guess marine biologists have used both an echo sounder and underwater microphone to record their sound.

D Still, I don't think that the sound they produce is loud enough to harm their fame for being silent animals.

E So, researchers must have already compared the sounds this fish can produce to those of other species.

(I) Sarah Vaughn (1924-1990) was one of the very great jazz vocalists, and one who managed to combine emotion and musicality in balance. (II) Inexplicably, she was never as popular as the jazz singers Billie Holiday or Ella Fitzgerald. (III) Vaughn studied piano as a child, then joined the Earl Hines band in 1943 as a vocalist. (IV) In the late 1940s, she left to sing with the Billy Eckstine band and then went solo. (V) Vaughn had many crossover hits during that decade, but was always seen as a jazz vocalist; one of the most gifted with a huge range and a variety of tone.
