"Telephone," as a word, is, of course, related to "telegraph," an existing technology, which also transmitted signals. The word fragment "tele" is from a Greek word meaning "distance," and "phone," also a Greek word, means "sound." The telegraph, invented in 1837 by Samuel F. B. Morse (1791-1872), transmitted the "Morse Code," sounds (21) ---- a wire. (22) ---- we could project sounds, little blips, over great distances, we could project the human voice. The idea of capturing sound had been around for decades before Alexander Graham Bell (1847-1922) presented his new invention premiered at the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition. The nation was a mere one hundred years away from the Declaration of Independence and the invention of the telephone moved America towards the twentieth century when machines (23) ---- human functions. The early designs for this new transmission device, (24) ---- to the voice, were modeled upon that of the telegraph: a device mounted on a wooden pedestal. (25) ----, Bell had other plans for his new invention. From the very beginning, he intended to market the device and Bell and his backers envisioned mass use of the telephone.

29-32: Answer these questions according to the passage below.

Lack of impulse control gets many ADHD people into hot water. Due to attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, they may say inappropriate things to parents, friends, teachers, supervisors, other employees, or customers. I once had a patient who had been fired from thirteen jobs because he had trouble controlling what he said. Even though he really wanted to keep several of the jobs, he would just blurt out what he was thinking before he had a chance to process the thought. Poorly thought-out decisions also relate to impulsivity. Rather than thinking a problem through, many ADHD people want an immediate solution and act without the necessary forethought. In a similar vein, impulsivity causes these people to have trouble going through the established channels at work. They often go right to the top to solve problems rather than working through the system. This may cause resentment from coworkers and immediate supervisors. Impulsivity may also lead to such problem behaviors as lying (saying the first thing that comes into your mind), stealing, having affairs, and excessive spending.

29. According to the passage, the patient who had been fired from thirteen jobs ----.

- A) should have said what he was thinking at once
- B) had a chance to process the thought, but preferred otherwise
- C) was not the first case in literature
- D) was favoured by the bosses if not colleagues
- E) in fact wanted to stick to some of them

30. It is clear from the passage that ----.

- A) stealing is only one of the observable consequences of impulsivity
- B) lying may cause resentment from coworkers and immediate supervisors
- C) impulsivity may rarely lead to such problem behaviors as excessive spending
- D) such behaviors as saying the first thing that comes into your mind may lead to impulsivity
- E) impulsivity may have little to do with lying, stealing or having affairs

31. It can be concluded from the passage that ----.

- A) ADHD people find an immediate solution and act with due forethought
- B) parents and friends may suffer from someone with ADHD more than teachers or customers
- C) ADHD people may not have a right grasp of hierarchy in bureaucracy
- D) it takes a long time in order for lack of impulse control to get ADHD people into hot water
- E) a patient had been fired from many jobs but he had learnt to control what he said
